

Eyes on 2010

The 2010 Camp Hanover Annual Report

Living at Camp Hanover, I came to feel like I was part of the created world, rather than a member of an alien species that has forgotten how to live on the planet it grew up with. I learned that living with fewer material encumbrments didn't mean living with less; it meant living with more - more community, more joy, more peace, more laughter.

I think Camp teaches a lot of lessons that escape us in the outside world:

...Community

...Communion with the natural world

...That we can work through difficulties and build bonds of love and trust among each other

At camp, I often reflected on the part in the gospel in which Jesus says, "the kingdom of God is among you." At Camp Hanover it felt real.
